Dynamo is a Montreal -based, interactive design agency that was founded in 2000. The company focuses on web and mobile design and development as well as the creation of brands. The project was to reorganize their 1975 sq.ft. office space, located on the ground floor of an 1863 building, in the heart of Old Montreal.

The main challenge was to make sure that every workspace was taking advantage of the natural light, coming from the 14 arch windows. A conference room was added in the middle of the space, as a white sculpted modular. The room is attached to the staircase leading to the basement part of the office, with a large glass wall.

of a turquoise wall was applied to the wall at the bottom of the stairs, yet still visible from upstairs. Every area is set up around the middle room: workstation, library as well as the lounge still allowing intimacy within each of the station.

The idea was to work around the historical architecture of the space and respect its integrity. The emphasis was put on the raw materials such as the stone walls, the detailed steel ceilings and the wood floors, in order to value their texture. The monochrome office furniture was carefully selected and the walls were painted with a pure white. The structural columns were painted gold.
